As President of the Australian Human Rights Commission, I am dismayed at the handling of the arrest of a woman in Ballarat, who was handcuffed by police despite her compliance, in front of her family. Human rights are for everyone, everywhere, everyday. In times of crisis, such as this pandemic, our rights are as important as ever. While measures to control infection have required temporary limitations of our rights and freedoms, they must always be proportionate to the risk—and managed appropriately.
