Australian Chambers of Parliament Standing Orders Regarding Nursing Infants

In 2003, Victorian state member for Forest Hill - Kirstie Marshall was forced to leave the Chamber with her 11 day old daughter after she'd brought her in to breastfeed.

A Victorian fact sheet about Women in Parliament

(<http://www.parliament.vic.gov.au/publications/fact-sheets/9469-fact-sheet-i4-women-in-parliament/download>) states that:

Under the rules, only members and parliamentary staff are allowed in the Chamber during debates. The Speaker did not allow her to stay and Ms Marshall left the Chamber with her baby. This incident sparked a lot of media and public comment about breastfeeding in Parliament and other workplaces. A few weeks later the Speaker relaxed the rules. Now, if a member needs to be in the Chamber, they can bring an infant in to breastfeed.

Since then, the NSW parliament became the first in the country to allow breastfeeding on the parliamentary floor. <http://www.theaustralian.com.au/archive/news/parliament-allows-breastfeeding/story-e6frg6o6-1111114668837>

However, only the ACT and the Federal Senate explicitly make exceptions to 'strangers' standing orders for nursing infants. In all other parliaments, the decision to allow a mother to breastfeed in Chamber is at the discretion of the Speaker.
