ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE

Department of Social Services

Topic: Senate Community Affairs Legislation Committee inquiry into the Social Services and Other Legislation Amendment (Simplifying Income Reporting and Other Measures) Bill 2020 - Spoken 3

Question reference number: SQ20-000053

Senator: Helen Polley

Type of Question: Spoken. Hansard Page/s: 26

Date set by the Committee for the return of answer: 19 February 2020

Question:

Senator POLLEY: Yes. If a person earns $2,000 in one week but nothing for the next three weeks, and if they're paid monthly, will they be any worse off compared to a person who is paid on a fortnightly or a weekly basis?

Mr Bennett: Chair, I'm going to take that one on notice because that's quite specific. My feeling is that they should not, because the same principle of apportionment will occur. If it's a monthly pay, it goes out for a month. Therefore, I'm not aware initially of how they could be worse off. But because it's such a specific question I will take it on notice

Answer:

Refer to SQ20-000064.

Date set by the Committee for the return of answer: 19 February 2020

Question:

What if a person has not yet received their pay slip at the date they are required to report income for the period? What will they be expected to do – will they have to estimate?

Answer:

Under the change of assessment model people will be required to report their income paid for the reporting period. If they have not received income in the reporting period, they will report zero income.

If they have received income (ie. received a salary payment from their employer) but have not yet received their payslip, people should contact their employer for their employment income information. Employers have an obligation to issue employees with a payslip, either digitally or in hard copy.

If someone does not have a payslip and has difficulty in obtaining information from their employer, they should contact Services Australia to discuss their circumstances and how they can meet their reporting obligations to enable them to access their social security payment.
