

I am writing to state my disappointment of the proposed Migration Amendment (Visa Capping) Bill 2010 on 26th May 2010.

About 8 years ago, I came to Australia as an international students, I have spend around 8 years to study and live in this country. I know this country even more than my home country. My life is here, my friends are here, my career is here, and I wish I will have a brighter future at here too. That's why I applied visa 885 in order to stay here as long as I can. I believe there are thousands people out there just like me. Some of my friends have been waiting for over 2 years; it is too cruel to simply reject their visa applications. It is unfair to cap the people who have already lodged their application before this bill even exists.

Lots of people are trying so hard to survive while waiting for the Permanent Resident visa. Without a PR, it is unbelievable difficult to get a job but we are still trying, because we believe life is fair, Australia is fair. But this visa capping bill is unfair.

I really appreciate if the government could make a very careful consideration before any decision.

Regards,
