

To whom may it Concern,

ABSA has given me an opportunity to become an assessor but Green loans (DEHWA) has still not approved the contract as of yet. This has impacted heavily on my family and I.

Ever since January this year, I have been waiting for my contract from DEWHA. It had wasted my time as well as money as I could not apply for other jobs. I have spent a lot of money and time for becoming an assessor which included the course fee, insurance, ABSA registration and Business registration with the ATO, but still till this day I have not received any job opportunity.

When I joined this Home sustainability assessor course, they had explained to us in relation to how good of a job opportunity this. With this job I was sure to be financially fit to get married. Unfortunately now due to this situation I decided to postpone my marriage, leaving myself emotionally distressed and confused. All these situations have left my family in stress and frustrated. It has affected my mother very badly as she is very depressed and worried.

Why doesn't DEWHA think positively? We have spent lots of money and have been left their as if everything is fine. Is this fair?

My suggestion for DEWHA is for all those assessors who have already benefited from this program (from day one to now) which are continuously working from DEWHA should be stopped and give the other assessors that did not get the opportunity to work a fair go. This way it will not affect the government's budget and will give the new assessors benefit from this scheme as well.

Your sincerely,
