Question

Mr HILL: I might put a few more detailed ones on notice as well. I'm not sure where you're at in the process and the extent to which you can or can't use the AFSL process if these matters of interest have been drawn to your attention to seek further information, which might be of interest to both ASIC and the committee and the public. Have you got a breakdown of numbers? If you want to take these on notice, I can see that you're fairly prepared, so you can probably provide them relatively quickly if that's easier to get to other topics. A breakdown of the number of current policyholders for each fund would be helpful. Have you got that there as well? If I outline these, is it possible to assemble a table, given you understand the metrics of what I'm trying to ascertain?

Ms Chester: I think that might be very efficient. But I'll give you one headline metric: 25,374 current policyholders across the four funds.

Mr HILL: Thank you. If you could take on notice, as soon as you're able, just to give us a breakdown in each fund, that would be very helpful too.

Ms Chester: Can do.

Mr HILL: Do you have a total value of AFCA determinations awarded in favour of customers in disputes in relation to any of these funds?

Extract – Hansard page 25

Ms Chester: While we don't have the total value of the AFCA awards here, we are aware that as of July 2021 there have been 19 AFCA determinations in total that have been made against three ACBF entities, and the total value of unpaid AFCA determinations against those entities was in the order of $105,000. We can give you the breakdown in the table.

Mr HILL: That would be terrific. When you say 'unpaid', is that because ultimately it's not compulsory—they are just choosing not to pay it—or because it's a passage-of-time issue?

Ms Chester: As I understand it, they've elected not to pay to date. Hang on, I've got another detailed table here. We do have the value of AFCA compensation orders. That's $105,000. There are fees currently owing to AFCA—they are yet to be paid or entities have chosen not to pay them. That's $196,000. Then there's also the value of potential compensation orders if all the complaints are resolved in complainants' favour. I've got quite a detailed breakdown table that we can share with you as well.

Unpaid AFCA Determinations and fees (as provided by AFCA to ASIC on 23 July 2021)

Entity	Number of determinations made	Value of AFCA compensation orders currently owing (excluding interest)	Value of potential compensation orders (if all complaints resolved in complainant's favour)	Fees currently owing to AFCA (approx)	Fees potentially payable to AFCA (if all complaints resolved in complainant's favour)

Total	19	$105,664.39	$1,576,994	$196,623.60	$1,250,775

Note: On 10 September 2021, Youpla advised ASIC that it was paying AFCA compensation orders in line with AFCA Determinations. AFCA has confirmed this. AFCA understands that Youpla is asking complainants to sign a release agreement post-Determination before funds are released, and this has caused a delay in the payment of some Determinations. We note that if complaints now lodged with AFCA are not resolved, there may be further compensation orders made against Youpla.

AFCA has also confirmed that a repayment arrangement for all current outstanding AFCA case fees for the ACBF entities has been agreed with Youpla. The repayment arrangement provides for payment by instalment, the last of which is due to be paid in February 2022.
