

Arms, science and space

The long-awaited Arms Trade Treaty is to be examined by the Joint Standing Committee on Treaties at a public hearing to be held on Monday 3 March in Canberra.

To date the agreement has been signed by 116 states, including Australia, and ratified by 11. It is expected to reach the ratification target of 50 states by mid-2014.

Committee Chair Wyatt Roy said Australia has been a strong supporter of the treaty and has worked hard to see it come into being.

“The treaty will have an important impact on our humanitarian objectives and on international security,” he said.

“It is important that we do all we can to combat the invidious effects of the illicit arms trade.”

Australia has played an important role in developing and promoting the agreement since it was first proposed in 2006. For the first time the regulation of the international trade in conventional arms - from tanks and missiles to small arms and light weapons - will be subject to common global standards. The treaty is aimed at curbing the multi-million dollar illicit arms trade which destabilises global peace and security.

The committee will also examine an agreement to improve scientific cooperation between Australian and Vietnam, opening up opportunities for researchers in both countries, and examine an amendment to Australia’s Agreement with the United States regarding space vehicle tracking.
