Question

Will First Nations peoples be able to access additional support to engage with the new system and new process for reporting employment income, including those people living in remote communities?

Answer

Aboriginal & Torres Strait Islander people will continue to have access to services at our service centres, mobile and remote servicing arrangements and at agents and access points. Targeted messaging will be delivered via Indigenous Radio broadcast - 'JAM PAKT with Jonzy', which is currently being carried on 218 community radio stations. Access to specialist staff including social workers, community engagement officers and Indigenous service officers will also continue.

Question:

Will there be a Centrelink phone line dedicated to supporting people with the new system and new process for reporting employment income in order to minimise wait times?

Answer:

Service delivery staff will be trained in the measure to provide support. People will have access to the existing self-service and staff facing service channels, with additional support resources within each of those channels. No additional phone line will be established under this measure.
