

Dears sir, madam, These laws penalise those who have preserved trees on their land who now cannot clear those trees for farming grazing or other productive uses. Those who ripped out the trees under then Government encouragement have the benefit of productive use of that land
The Government have taken a benefit and therefore should buy or rent that Affected land.

Some equalisation should be applied such that those detrimentally affected get a benefit to offset the loss.

Re submission from Don Pye re Native vegetation Laws Senate InquiryEquality of opportunity should be available to those that have trees on their properties, via compensation or full yield in ability to subdivide.... If the Government TAKES an advantage the Government MUST GIVE payment or other compensating benefit . Regards Don Pye
