

Australia should continue to refuse to classify material with excessive violence, especially associated with sexual themes, and refuse to classify material showing aberrant sexual behaviour. It does not make an ounce of difference that gamers will get the items anyway. Children and young people are going to be exposed to this stuff whether or not there is classification, if that is what their care-givers have decided to expose them to. But by refusing classification it will be easier to protect the rest of our children and your people. sincerely, Jean Graham
