Senate Community Affairs References Committee

Committee releases interim report for inquiry into support for Australia's thalidomide survivors

Issue date: 14 February 2019

The Senate Community Affairs References Committee has tabled an interim report for its inquiry into support for Australia's thalidomide survivors.

The committee's report makes seven recommendations to government departments, agencies and medical colleges.

'Evidence to the committee indicates that thalidomide survivors face significant health issues and physical impairments and have been inadequately supported to date,' the Committee's Chair, Senator Rachel Siewert said.

'This interim report makes a series of practical recommendations that the committee considers should be immediately implemented to assist thalidomide survivors, while the committee concludes its consideration of the issues surrounding the provision of an appropriate level of support for thalidomide survivors,' Senator Siewert said.

'The committee has received substantial evidence as to the need to revisit the issue of compensation for Australia's thalidomide survivors,' Senator Siewert said. 'The committee's final report, will more closely consider the role of the Commonwealth Government and the range of financial and non-financial supports needed to assist all Australian thalidomide survivors,' she said.
