

Public Governance, Performance and Accountability Amendment (Vaccine Indemnity) Bill 2023

By Christiena Ennis

Pharmaceutical corporations should NEVER be granted indemnity for the production of any pharmaceutical product, especially vaccines.

Indemnification has created an incentive for risk-taking in the pharmaceutical industry which is not aligned with the fundamental principles of medicine. Where indemnity exists, it is human nature to take larger risks, whether it be a conscious decision or subconscious, the outcomes are poor. All companies work for shareholders first and it is profits that motivate their actions. People should always be put before profits.

However, people were not put before profits in the case of the Covid-19 'vaccines'. The People of Australia were not asked if they wanted to be guinea pigs or lab rats for these large foreign corporations to experiment on.

In contravention of the Nuremberg Code 1947, the Australian people were not informed of potential harm or side-effects that could be caused by the Covid-19 'vaccines' and their consent was not asked for. Instead, their livelihoods were threatened if they did not accept the 'jab'. Nor were the People of Australia informed of the fact that the Covid-19 'vaccines' had not been properly tested. They trusted that the government and the Therapeutics Goods Administration to do their job by ensuring public safety, but sadly, as the 139,000 (that we know of) adverse reactions, including a quite a number of deaths attest, this was not the case.

To add insult to injury, it was discovered that due to the government signing Indemnity Agreements with these wealthy foreign multinational corporations who made billions of dollars from Australian citizen's suffering and deaths, that there was no redress. They were injured, or lost loved ones, and no one was held responsible.

Granting indemnity for any pharmaceutical product means the People of Australia watch as the government hands over a blank cheque to these foreign pharmaceutical conglomerates. They walk away with even more cash while the Australian people remain sick (or dead) with the after-effects of these experimental pharmaceutical 'vaccines'.

The Australian Government needs to ensure, and guarantee to the Australian People, that no future indemnities be granted by the Commonwealth in relation to the use of 'vaccines'. This bill will limit financial and legal risk to the Commonwealth and aid in the restoration of trust in medicine, which, at this moment is sadly lacking, as is the Australian people's trust in the government of Australia.

The Australian Government is going to have to work very hard to regain even a modicum of trust of the people of Australia.
