Dear Committee Secretary:

Law Students for Refugees (LSFR) welcomes the opportunity to provide a submission to the Senate Legal and Constitutional Affairs References Committee. This submission addresses the following matters identified in the terms of the inquiry:

- Conditions and treatment of asylum seekers and refugees at the regional processing centres in the Republic of Nauru and Papua New Guinea; and
- Transparency and accountability mechanisms that apply to the regional processing centres in the Republic of Nauru and Papua New Guinea.

LSFR is particularly suited to comment on these aspects of the inquiry in light of our history working to obtain information about conditions in offshore detention. LSFR has a standing Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) working group which has provided the source for front page stories across Fairfax Media newspapers,¹ and engages in ongoing advocacy campaigns.

¹ ‘Self-harm in detention centres at epidemic levels, internal documents show’, The Sydney Morning Herald 16 January 2016: <<http://www.smh.com.au/federal-politics/political->

Further information regarding LSFR's challenges in obtaining access to information regarding offshore detention is discussed in Section III(C) below. This submission is organised as follows:

Section I uses incident logs obtained under the FOIA to demonstrate the poor conditions in offshore detention. The incident logs were prepared by the Department of Immigration and Border Protection (DIBP) and show alarming rates of self-harm, violence and ill-health in the offshore detention network.

Section II discusses the importance of access to information regarding offshore detention, with reference to the extremely high fiscal and human cost of the policy. It explains how asylum seekers, taxpayers, and Australian media and political organisations all have a genuine interest in access to accurate information about offshore detention.

Section III explains the obstacles to accessing information. It addresses how vital transparency and accountability mechanisms have been rolled back or removed completely from the detention network; how decisions by the Nauruan government have greatly restricted media access to the country; and how the Australian government provides very limited access to the information it holds domestically.

Section IV concludes with a series of recommendations for managing Australia's asylum seeker processing regime in the future.

I INCIDENT LOGS AND CONDITIONS AND CIRCUMSTANCES

This section is based on documents released in January 2016 by the DIBP under an FOIA request. The documents are 'summaries of incident report logs', prepared by the DIBP itself.

The reports cover approximately 12 months, with the earliest incident occurring in June 2014 and the most recent in July 2015. Over this period there were 134 recorded incidents of self-harm, 75 recorded incidents of the use of force, and 33 serious assaults, among other categories of incident. The frequency and gravity of incidents demonstrate that Australia's offshore detention centres are a serious threat to the health and welfare of detained individuals.

The logs contain the following six incident types:

- ‘Self-harm – Actual’
- ‘Use of Force’
- ‘Disturbance – Major’
- ‘Assault – Serious’
- ‘Accident/Injury – Serious’
- ‘Public Health Risk’

This section outlines the frequency and usual response to each type of incident, including specific examples from each category. Note that incident numbers appear in the format “POMS:XX-XXXX” in the logs and this format will be reproduced throughout the footnotes of this document. The complete logs are attached to this submission as Annex 1.

It should be noted that these logs are incomplete insofar as they cover only the above six incident types. LSRF’s FOIA request, which returned the documents, was narrowed to only these categories due to cost constraints.

A ‘Self-Harm—Actual’

The logs show that there were 134 incidents of actual self-harm among asylum seekers on Nauru and Manus Island between June 2014 and July 2015.

These were most commonly cuts inflicted with razor blades; however the ingestion of dangerous substances was also common. These substances ranged from cleaning products to razor blades, screws, and handfuls of gravel.² The variety of implements used to inflict self-harm may indicate that self-harm continues after asylum seekers have been restricted access to typically dangerous items like razors.

Many of the instances of self-harm amount to attempted suicide, including attempted hanging³ and the refusal of vital medical treatment.⁴ Self-harm by children has also been reported in the Nauru detention centre.⁵

In July 2015, a female asylum seeker phoned immigration officials on Nauru and advised them that ‘people’ were coming to her residence to film her pouring gasoline over herself and setting herself alight. When police and fire officials arrived at the site they found the woman covered in petrol and holding a lighter. She threatened to self-immolate if emergency services entered her residence. The situation eventually de-escalated and the woman allowed Australian Border Force officials to wash the petrol from her clothes and body.⁶

⁵ Ibid see for e.g., POMS: 15-1222; 15-1214.

⁶ Ibid POMS:15-3192.

In June 2014, three separate incidents of self-harm and unrest were recorded on a single day. This created such an emergency that the DIBP made a formal request for the Nauruan police to attend and restore order in the compound.⁷

The rate of self-harm in detention is disproportionately higher than the rate in the Australian population, with the primary variable being the detention centres themselves. Indefinite detention and restricted access to mental health services has precipitated a crisis in the detention network.

B 'Use of Force'

Seventy-five (75) instances of the use of force were logged for the June 2014 to July 2015 period. This category of incident is varied, and includes both instances of force used by asylum seekers⁸ and against asylum seekers by detention centre staff.⁹

Disturbingly, the use of force by certain individuals has frequently occurred in public or shared areas of the detention centres.¹⁰ In one incident, a male asylum seeker became aggressive in the mess area, throwing objects in the vicinity of children and posing a serious risk to their safety.¹¹

There are multiple incidents of asylum seekers returning from 'open centre activities' intoxicated and becoming violent upon re-entering detention.¹² This usually results in the local police force being called. The apparent lack of 'cooling off' facilities for intoxicated individuals raises questions over the adequacy of processes for dealing with open centre arrangements and for the safety of residents.

On 26 December 2014 at the Manus Island detention centre, a confrontation between an asylum seeker and a DIBP employee escalated to violence when the employee shoved the asylum seeker after a verbal altercation. The employee was restrained by a 'Safety and Security Advisor' (SSA), also employed by the DIBP. The employee then punched the SSA in the face. The employee was immediately fired after the incident.¹³

The use of force by centre staff has included the use of 'mechanical restraints' to move asylum seekers¹⁴ and 'Wilsons [sic] approved restraint techniques'.¹⁵ The seemingly customary use of force by Wilson Security and other contracted staff demonstrates an urgent need for strong oversight procedures to ensure appropriate levels of force are used in each case.

C 'Disturbance—Major'

Twenty-six (26) 'major disturbances' occurred over the June 2014-July 2015 period. This category of incident is also varied, although all such incidents were serious in nature and posed risks to the safety of asylum seekers and detention centre staff.

Reports of violence or threats directed towards asylum seekers by Nauruan residents are most concerning. Given that many asylum seekers are destined for resettlement in these communities, this creates a risk to both their current and future safety.

In one case in March 2015 a group of locals travelled past the 'Anibare' accommodation and threw rocks and yelled abuse at residents.¹⁶

In another case:

[A] group of [REDACTED] housed on Nauru were subject to an unprovoked attack by a group of other Nauruan residents. They fled their assailants with two only emerging once the Nauru Police had arrived at the location of the incident. The other two were located shortly thereafter. They have been seen by departmental personnel on Nauru and are described as being shaken by events. As at 2109 hours local time all have been transported to the Republic of Nauru hospital by ambulance for assessment.¹⁷

On 14 July 2015 a same-sex asylum seeker couple were returning to their settlement site at approximately 10:00pm. They encountered a group of three Nauruan men while walking down a path in the woods. The group approached them, yelling "fuck you gays" and then beat the pair with pieces of wood. The asylum seekers were both taken by ambulance to the Nauruan hospital, where one of them vomited repeatedly after sustaining a serious head injury. A report was made to the Nauruan police. No further details are given in the incident log.¹⁸ It is worth noting that persecution on the basis of sexual orientation is one of the grounds for seeking asylum that has been read into Art. 1A(2) of the 1951 Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees.¹⁹

The frequency of 'disturbances' is particularly concerning as it indicates that the environment both inside and outside of the offshore centres is adversarial between all parties. This situation can only worsen over time unless direct measures are taken to de-escalate tensions.

D 'Assault—Serious'

There were 34 incidents of serious assault logged for the period covered. These frequently accompanied major disturbances and were similarly serious and varied. Medical treatment was required in all of the following instances.

The logs cover: the use of broken sauce bottles as weapons in a fight that broke out between three transferees;²⁰ asylum seekers throwing chairs at each other;²¹ apparent family violence;²² and an assault by local residents on contracted staff members.²³

Most assaults were committed by asylum seekers on other asylum seekers. The logs generally include some permutation of 'cause unknown'. The tensions caused by close quartering of disparate communities, inadequate and insufficient facilities, and the prospect of release into a hostile community will only continue to create conflict and violence in the detention network.

E 'Accident/Injury—Serious' and 'Public Health Risk'

These two categories of incidents were logged less frequently than those involving the infliction of deliberate harm; there were 16 serious accidents or injuries logged and 23 public health risks recorded for the June 2014-July 2015 period.

While less frequent than deliberate harm, accidental injuries and health risks were still numerous, raising serious questions as to the quality and safety of detention facilities and supervision at the offshore detention centres. For example, the logs indicate two reports of electrocution.²⁴

Moreover, 'Public Health Risks' referred to the outbreak of contagious diseases at the centres, including gastroenteritis,²⁵ malaria,²⁶ and hand, foot and mouth disease.²⁷ These incidents raise questions as to the capacity of detention health care and the adequacy of detention centre hygiene facilities.

F Misclassification as 'Accident'

The logs indicate that some injuries classified as 'accidents' may have actually involved deliberate harm. For example, an employee was injured after intervening in a dispute between two detainees, yet the incident was logged as an accident and there is no corresponding ‘disturbance’ log.²⁸ In a particularly troubling entry, a detainee held in the Nauruan jail overnight returned to the detention centre ‘with a sore knee and ... open lacerations’ on his face, claiming he had been stripped naked and had several of his possessions stolen.²⁹

The misclassification of harm inflicted deliberately as an ‘accident’ is concerning, raising questions as to whether appropriate follow-up measures were taken in response to the incidents.

II THE NEED FOR ACCESS TO INFORMATION

A Commonwealth Responsibility for Transparency

Key to this submission is whether transparency and accountability mechanisms that apply to the Australian government also apply to the offshore detention regime. The legal character of this situation is still unresolved after the recent High Court judgment in Plaintiff M68/2015. In that case the Court found that the Commonwealth’s involvement in the offshore processing regimes is ‘indisputable’.³⁰

Clause 4 of Australia’s Memorandum of Understanding with the Republic of Nauru and its Memorandum of Understanding with Papua New Guinea state that: ‘The Commonwealth of Australia will conduct all activities in respect of this MOU in accordance with its Constitution and all relevant domestic laws’.³¹ However, it should be noted that these documents are not legally binding.

The MOUs suggest that although its responsibilities may be limited, the Commonwealth cannot entirely evade its duties to act with transparency and accountability offshore. We submit that wherever the Commonwealth acts in an essentially administrative capacity overseas it must adhere to all relevant domestic laws and principles.

B The Lack of Available Information and its Affect on Asylum Seekers, Taxpayers, and Media and Advocacy Organisations

Transparency is a pillar of Australian democracy without which responsible government and the rule of law would be impossible to maintain. Access to information is a cornerstone of transparency. The inability to access information presents unique difficulties for asylum seekers, taxpayers, and media and advocacy organisations. Each of these groups interact with the Australian polity in different ways vis-à-vis offshore detention regimes: as the subjects of the policy, the people who fund it, and those who seek to keep its operation accountable.

1 Asylum Seekers

Procedural fairness is a manifestation of transparency and information accessibility in the rule of law; it ensures that individuals know the legal powers that might adversely affect their rights and interests.³² It is especially important for asylum seekers as they are inherently more vulnerable to the adverse impacts of executive decisions made under the Migration Act. These decisions, if made on the basis of incorrect information, could put their lives in danger.

Transparency in the form of access to justice is also essential for asylum seekers as subjects of offshore detention. Asylum seekers may find it extremely difficult to understand adverse decisions affecting their interests without the help of a lawyer. The Commonwealth has itself noted that all individuals should be given ‘appropriate advice and assistance, no matter how they enter our justice system’.³³ For asylum seekers this might include advice about their legal rights and obligations, and any appeal mechanisms available to them.

2 Taxpayers

It is estimated that the government is spending $1.1 billion per year on offshore detention.³⁴ Accessible information on this expenditure is key for taxpayers, who can keep the government accountable for the way public funds are spent. The right to demand clear rationales for spending underpins the broader doctrine of responsible government. Under the Public Governance, Performance and Accountability Act 2013, Departmental Secretaries and Ministers have duties to ensure the proper use of public funds.³⁵ The government must therefore be transparent with regard to the purposes for which it expends public money on the offshore detention regime.

In Plaintiff M68/2015, the High Court confirmed that the Commonwealth’s power to detain asylum seeker is only authorised to the extent that these regimes are “reasonably necessary” to achieve the purpose of processing.³⁶ The Commonwealth’s power to fund detention must logically be co-terminate with its power to detain. There is currently little publicly available information about who is processing the asylum seekers held offshore, or whether they are being processed at all. Taxpayers therefore lack the ability to scrutinise whether their funds are being used for an appropriate and legally valid purpose. This lack of information is a failure of transparency, and ultimately a breakdown in the chain of accountability from the executive to the people.

3 Media and Advocacy Organisations

Media providers have a duty to keep the population informed of matters of national significance. Media access to immigration detention facilities is an important way of ensuring that the human rights of asylum seekers are being respected. Professor Carmen Lawrence of the Australian National University maintains that: ‘policy must begin with dialogue and building relationships with impacted communities, in this case the Nauruan community as well as the asylum seeker community’.³⁷ Political parties with control over media access to detention centres have a vested interest in presenting them in a positive light, so the need for accessible information in this area is even greater.

Advocacy organisations will also be better served by increased access to information. Lacking clear facts, organised policy debate is hampered and the risk of misinformation increases. Without adequate information about the operation of the offshore detention policy, neither its opponents nor its advocates are able to have a free and informed debate about its merits. This fundamentally detracts from the validity of the democratic process in Australia.

III OBSTACLES TO ACCESSING INFORMATION

A The Border Force Act

It is usual practice in Australia that a doctor has an ethical duty to report child abuse if they suspect it has occurred. However, s 42 of Border Force Act provides that the disclosure of ‘protected information’ can carry a sentence of up to two years imprisonment. Information about abuse could be designated ‘protected information’ and entrusted persons publicly disclosing it could be prosecuted, including doctors working in detention centres. Groups such as the Australian Medical Association recently joined national medical student and the teachers’ unions in their expression of grave concerns over these laws.³⁸ Under the Act, the government has unfettered power to determine what information is considered ‘protected’ and who is an ‘entrusted person.’

The government also has a history of non-cooperation with information disclosure requests in offshore detention. Potential witnesses for a Manus Island inquiry were afraid to give evidence because they are no longer protected by parliamentary privilege.³⁹ In addition, there have been calls by a recent Senate committee that Australia increase the transparency of conditions and operations at Regional Processing Centres.⁴⁰

B Restrictions on Service Providers and the Media

The non-governmental organisation Save the Children Australia provided education and welfare services to both adults and children on Nauru beginning in August 2013. In October 2014, nine Save The Children staff members were deported from Nauru when they raised concerns from asylum seekers about sexual harassment from guards. The staff members were accused of orchestrating a campaign to undermine the government’s offshore detention policy. However, a later internal DIBP report found no evidence that they had acted outside their duties on Nauru and stated that they should be offered compensation.⁴¹

Save the Children Australia, when leaving Nauru, urged Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull to adopt a three-point plan to ensure that child welfare was safeguarded in Australia’s immigration system, and called for ‘greater transparency and independent oversight across all Australian offshore and onshore processing centres’.⁴²

In January 2014, the Nauruan government raised the cost of a journalistic visa to enter Nauru by almost 2000%, from $400 to $8000. The fee is non-refundable if a visa application is rejected. This created concerns in Canberra, with the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade stating in an internal cable that the increase raised

‘concerns around transparency and media access’.⁴³ The seizure of phones and laptops from Save the Children staff and other contractors in October 2015 was also part of the Nauruan government’s attempt to ‘hunt down journalists’ sources’ at the detention centres.⁴⁴

In October 2015, the Australian government awarded the contract for the provision of services on Nauru to Broadspectrum, formerly Transfield Services. A private company taking over the provision of vital services creates greater concerns over access to information and accountability for actions taken on Nauru. Private companies are not susceptible to FOIA requests or other public-sector accountability mechanisms and their involvement risks creating further opacity in the operation of the detention network.

In February 2016, the Nauruan government cancelled all Australian and New Zealand visitor visas to the country. The government’s official twitter account initially claimed this was a response to an ABC journalist entering the country on a tourist visa without declaring their media credentials. This tweet was subsequently deleted. The ABC flatly denied these allegations.⁴⁵

C Obstruction of the FOIA

In the absence of media access to offshore detention centres, FOIA requests have become an increasingly vital tool for obtaining information about conditions in detention. As part of the preparation for this submission, LSFR undertook a concerted effort to obtain more detailed reports based on the summaries of incidents logs released to the group in January 2016.

The aim of the project was to use incident numbers contained in the summaries logs to send requests for the corresponding ‘detail reports’ on any incidents that warranted further investigation. These reports contain significantly more detail than the small summaries on the log spreadsheets.

In order to adequately cover all of the 103 pages of the logs, LSFR engaged 21 volunteers to assist. Each volunteer was tasked with reading over specific pages and sending FOIA requests seeking further details for any records that they found concerning. As discussed in Section I, requests were sent for information on incidents ranging from homophobic assaults to hangings, riots, attempted self-immolation and the ingestion of poison, gravel and razor blades.

The first requests were sent on 24 January 2016. A total of 64 requests for 97 detail reports and related documents were sent over roughly three weeks in late-January and early-February. The volunteers did not specify that they made the requests as part of a coordinated project, and were not required to make any such disclosure under the FOIA.

On 19 February 2016, every volunteer received an identical notice from the assistant director of the FOI branch within the DIBP. The notice informed LSFR that the Department had chosen to treat all of the requests as a single request and then issue a blanket refusal of access. This refusal was issued on the basis that fulfilling the requests, taken together, was too large a task for the DIBP to complete.

In making this decision the assistant director relied on Farrell v Department of Immigration and Border Protection [2014], a decision by the Office of the Australian Information Commissioner (OAIC). In Farrell, the former Information Commissioner held that requests that relate to documents of substantially the same subject matter for the purposes of s 24(2)(b) of the FOIA if they seek documents that are ‘referred to in the spreadsheet and relating to incidents within the detention network’.⁴⁶

The assistant director informed LSFR that the DIBP would be willing to devote a maximum of 40 hours to processing the request, and calculated that each individual detail report would take 3 hours to process. This would allow the group to request only 13 reports. He also advised that it would be prudent to appoint a representative to communicate with him on behalf of all of the applicants. Each individual applicant would need to give their consent to him in writing to authorise the representative. A copy of the notice of 19 February is attached to this submission as Annex 2.

This treatment effectively renders the FOIA ineffective at obtaining data from the government so long as its source is presented in a certain way and more than a fraction of the data is sought. The assistant director gave no time frame for the expiration of the rule that any and all requests for detail reports would be taken together and then refused. If an unrelated journalist or public interest group attempted to obtain a similar detail report today, it is possible that they would be refused on the ground that their new request would be considered part of LSFR’s requests. Any person not involved in a coordinated project would also have no ability to appoint a representative, as they would have no way of knowing the identities and contact details of every other person who had recently requested information from a government spreadsheet.

⁴⁶ Farrell v Department of Immigration and Border Protection [2014] AICmr 74, at [20].

Further, the OAIC's interpretation of the term 'subject matter' in s 24(2)(b) of the FOIA is flawed. The decision in Farrell relies on the documents being both 'referred to in the spreadsheet' and 'relating to incidents within the detention network' in order to determine that their subject matter is 'substantially the same'. However, the fact that documents are 'referred to' in the same spreadsheet does not mean they have the same content. To treat two documents as substantially the same because they are mentioned together in a third document is reasoning backwards. While all of the detail reports sought by LSFR were mentioned in a spreadsheet, they related to different incidents and would contain entirely unique information.

Treating all documents that 'relate to incidents within the detention network' as having substantially the same subject matter is also an extraordinarily wide interpretation. By the same token, access to documents that 'relate to misconduct in the police force' or 'relate to corruption in union organisations' would also be restricted through the s 24(2)(b) mechanism. The application of Farrell by the DIBP is demonstrably contrary to the objectives of the FOIA and would represent a concerning trend towards opacity if adopted by other Departments.

IV CONCLUSION AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Australia's offshore detention centres have increasingly become black sites, places effectively closed to all public scrutiny where asylum seekers are detained indefinitely without charge. What information that can be found about conditions within the centres is almost exclusively evidence of misery and violence. By mistake or design successive Australian governments have engineered a situation where taxpayers have spent billions of dollars on a policy, the details of which it is forbidden to know. The seemingly deliberate obfuscation of the details of what goes inside our detention network represents nothing less than a fundamental breakdown of trust between the government and the Australian people.

In light of the findings in this submission, LSFR makes the following recommendations:

- That the Committee calls for the offshore detention network to be immediately shut down, and all asylum seekers currently detained on Manus Island and Nauru be brought to Australia for processing;
- That the Committee calls for a public debate on the conditions and treatment of asylum seekers held in offshore detention, as a matter of good governance;
- That the Committee requests evidence that asylum seekers have been detained only for steps "reasonably necessary" in their processing; and that therefore Commonwealth expenditure on detention has been legally supported per the High Court's decision in Plaintiff M68/2015; and

- That the Committee examines the use the OAIC's decision in Farrell by the DIBP, and whether it's application has been contrary to the objectives of the FOIA.

Annex 2

Revised FOI ref: [REDACTED]
Revised file ref: [REDACTED]

19 February 2016

Dear Applicant

Advice under s.24(2) and notice under s.24AB of the Freedom of Information Act 1982

1. I am writing to you in response to your request under the Freedom of Information Act 1982 (the FOI Act) seeking incident detail reports with 'POM' reference numbers and further documentation arising from or related to the incident reports.
2. This request is one of 64 valid requests received by the Department of Immigration and Border Protection (the Department) between 24 January and 13 February 2016 which seek access to 97 distinct Incident Detail Reports with 'POM' identifiers. The requests also seek further documentation, ranging for example from 'any follow up reports prepared as a result of the events described in that incident and any associated documents' to more specific requests, for example 'any internal correspondence regarding the proposed treatment and ongoing supervision of the asylum seeker who self-harmed'.

Purpose of this notice

3. This notice has two purposes.
4. The first purpose is to advise you that, in accordance with s.24(2) of the FOI Act, the Department is treating the 64 requests for the 97 incident detail reports and additional documentation as a single request, as the requests relate to documents the subject matter of which is substantially the same.
5. The second purpose is to advise you that I consider that the work involved in processing this request in its current form would substantially and unreasonably divert the resources of the Department from its other operations due to the size of the request. This is called a 'practical refusal reason' (s.24AA of the FOI Act).
6. On this basis, I intend to refuse access to the documents you requested. However, before I make a final decision to do this, you have an opportunity to revise your request. This is called a 'request consultation process' as set out under s.24AB of the FOI Act.

Advice concerning treating the requests as a single request

7. Section 24 of the FOI Act provides for agencies to combine requests where 'the requests relate to documents, the subject matter of which is substantially the same' if, once combined, a practical refusal reason exists. It is my view that the subject matter of the incident detail reports is substantially the same (being incident detail reports from the Regional Processing Centres or in relation to refugees living in the countries where the Regional Processing Centres are located).
8. Although the 64 requests have been made by 15 different people, s.24 of the FOI Act does not require the requests to be made by the same applicant in order for them to be treated as a single request. Refer also to paragraph 3.108 of the Guidelines issued by the Australian Information Commissioner under s 93A of the Freedom of Information Act 1982.
9. The request consultation period, which is outlined below, requires the applicant to interact with the Department in order to progress the request. To assist in this process you may wish, in agreement with the other applicants, to appoint a representative to correspond with the Department on your behalf.

Why I intend to refuse your request

10. The request, as combined, seeks access to a total of 97 incident detail reports and various additional documents relevant or related to the content of the incident detail reports. The FOI Act contains two 'practical refusal reasons'. The relevant one for the purposes of this notice is that processing the request 'would substantially and unreasonably divert the resources of the agency from its other operations' (s.24AA(1)(a)(i)).
11. It is my view that the request, as it currently stands, satisfies this practical refusal reason because it would take an unreasonable amount of time to identify, obtain and assess the documents.
12. As advised, the request is for 97 unique incident detail reports and various related documents. Based on the Department's previous experience, it takes an average of three (3) hours work to finalise an FOI request for a single incident detail report. After consulting with the relevant business area, I am satisfied that three hours is an appropriate estimate to use in relation to the incident detail reports sought in this request. This time estimate includes sourcing the documents, assessing redactions, internal consultations and consultation with third parties (such as contracted service providers) and preparation of formal assessment and decision making records. I therefore estimate that processing/assessing only the incident detail reports would take 97 x 3 hours which equals 291 hours.
13. In addition, the requests seek further documentation which would add to this processing time. After considering the types of additional information sought I estimate that it would take an additional five (5) hours of work to locate and assess the additional information sought for each incident detail report. This time would include identifying and obtaining the documents in scope (which would involve numerous consultations with service providers and multiple areas of the Department), collation of the documents, assessment of redactions, internal and third party consultations and preparation of formal assessment and decision making documentation. I therefore estimate that processing/assessing the additional information requested for each incident detail report would take 97 x 5 hours which equals 485 hours.

14. I therefore estimate that it would take 291 plus 485 which equals 776 hours to process/assess the entire request.
15. It is the Department's view that requests under the FOI Act for access to documents should take no more than 40 hours to complete. Our position is that requests requiring more than 40 hours to complete are an unreasonable and substantial diversion of the Department's resources. This balances the right of applicants to seek information under the FOI Act with the Department's need to appropriately allocate resources to its functions. There will be instances where, due to the nature of the request, it may be appropriate to allocate more resources to an FOI request. I am, however, satisfied that in this case such circumstances do not exist.
16. FOI resources in agencies are finite, as most staff in agencies are not-trained to make decisions under the FOI Act. The other staff of the Department are employed to undertake specific functions other than to make FOI decisions. It is not feasible to remove untrained staff from their other duties to meet voluminous FOI requests. Even if it were feasible, diverting those staff from their normal duties would have a detrimental impact on the other services normally delivered by those staff. Unless there were compelling public interest factors in the release, this would be a substantial and unreasonable diversion of the Department's resources.
17. As a result, I am satisfied that your request as it currently stands would substantially and unreasonably divert the resources of the Department from its other operations. I am therefore unable to progress your request until I have consulted with you on its scope.

Advice concerning the documents in scope

18. The documents within the scope of this request consist of incident detail reports and various related documents about incidents at the Regional Processing Centres, or in the community in the regional processing countries.
19. The Department recognises that there is a significant public interest in the welfare of transferees and refugees residing in these locations. This, however, needs to be balanced against other public interests including, but not limited to, the expectation of all transferees and refugees (and their families) in regional processing countries that their personal information will be protected. There is also the need to protect the secure operation of the Regional Processing Centres and the proper and efficient conduct of the agency.
20. Given the material already in the public domain, including incident summary spreadsheets available on the Department's FOI Disclosure Log, published transcripts of parliamentary hearings and published parliamentary reports on Regional Processing Centres and the regional processing countries, and information available through media releases and media reports, the public interest in disclosure of information regarding the welfare of refugees and transferees in regional processing countries is already largely filled without further disclosure.

Consultation over scope

21. You now have an opportunity to revise your request to enable it to proceed.
22. You may consult with me either directly, or through a representative, on the scope during the consultation period which is from the date of this notice until close of business Friday 4 March 2016.

23. You may request that I extend the consultation period if you wish, by writing to me before the end of the consultation period at foi@border.gov.au. (s.24AB(5)).
24. Please note that s.24AB(8) of the FOI Act provides that the legislated processing time for your request is 'suspended' until you have either:
- withdrawn the request, or
 - revised the request, or
 - advised me that you do not wish to revise the request.
25. In order for your request to be revised in such a way as to progress your request, you will have to reach an agreement with the Department on a scope that would not meet the practical refusal reason; in other words, the scope would no longer be considered to be a substantial and unreasonable diversion of the agency's resources.
26. As there are multiple applicants who have a stake in this request, in order for the request to be adequately revised, or for you to advise that you do not intend to revise the request, we will require a response from each individual with a stake in the request. As advised above, you may wish to appoint a representative to consult with the Department on your behalf.
27. If I am not contacted by you, or by someone representing you in relation to your request, before the end of the consultation period with an agreed position (to either revise or affirm the scope of your request, withdraw your request, or ask for an extension of time to respond to the s.24AB notice), your request will be deemed to be withdrawn in accordance with s.24AB(7) of the FOI Act.

How to make a complaint about the handling of your FOI request

28. You may complain to the Australian Information Commissioner if you have concerns about how the Department has handled your request under the FOI Act.
29. Your complaint must be in writing and must specify the agency you are complaining about. You can send your complaint to the Australian Information Commissioner using the details available at www.oaic.gov.au.

Contacting the FOI Section

30. If you wish to discuss this matter, I can be contacted using the details provided below. I look forward to hearing from you shortly.

Revised FOI reference and file reference

31. As I am treating the requests as a single request, I have assigned the FOI reference and file reference at the top of this notice to the single request.

Yours sincerely!
