House Standing Committee on Infrastructure, Transport and Cities

Inquiry into the Australian Government's role in the development of cities

Issue date: Thursday, 1 March 2017

Local aspiration equals national good

The ability of regional centres to absorb population growth, thereby safeguarding the high quality of life and economic prosperity enjoyed by Australians, will be one of the themes explored by the House Standing Committee on Infrastructure, Transport and Cities when it visits Newcastle tomorrow.

The public hearing is part of the Committee's inquiry into the Australian Government's role in the development of cities.

Committee Chair, Mr John Alexander OAM MP, said the Committee expects to hear from community groups, academics and business leaders on how best to ensure the Hunter's growth boosts its productivity and delivers liveability benefits.

"Regions such as the Hunter Valley and cities such as Newcastle have the capacity to accommodate many more people and businesses, easing the squeeze on capital cities," Mr Alexander said.

"We need to heed the aspirations of these communities and ensure we set them up with the governance arrangements, infrastructure and resources they need to succeed."

Newcastle City Council aspires to fast rail links between Newcastle, Sydney and Brisbane.

"Newcastle and the Hunter would appear to be of significant interest for various proponents of transformative infrastructure such as fast train linkages," Newcastle City Council said.

"Central to these initiatives are new approaches to infrastructure funding, including value capture. Federal government involvement will be required to attract, negotiate and secure such projects."
