

I was wondering how we can use a criteria that will allow our isolated students to get justice.

The amount of mail deliveries per week may be a guide to isolation. Most people who live close enough to educational facilities without having to be relocated would receive mail delivery every day. Anyone living in isolated areas receive less deliveries. This would eliminated students living in Sydney with Mum and Dad but declaring they live away from home as they would still be receiving mail delivery to that address every day. I realise this still doesn't help students who live in Dubbo or Narromine for example but would help students who live out of these large towns or cities who previously would have received Youth Allowance under the old scheme. I would imagine this would not be difficult to find out as Australia Post would have the information.

We thank you for your dedication to amend this total disregard for our younger generations educational opportunities. No thanks to the so called elected politicians - here for the people???? I don't think so. Maybe if we move to another country Julia might then show some compassion and understanding.
