Question reference number: QoN 21

Type of question: pre hearing request for information

Date set by the committee for the return of answer: 8 November 2017

Number of pages: 2

Question: Detail of specific initiatives and communications strategies to reach Indigenous Australians, culturally and linguistically diverse people, people with disabilities.

Answer:

1800RESPECT supports all members of the community affected by violence including those from culturally and linguistically diverse (CALD) backgrounds and Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, as well as people with disabilities.

On 16 November 2017, 1800RESPECT established a National Sector Advisory Group to provide input regarding the ongoing operations and future directions of 1800RESPECT. This group brings together domestic and family violence and sexual assault experts with knowledge and experience in disability and family law areas as well as on issues facing Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds, same sex relationships, and Australians in rural and remote areas.

1800RESPECT offers a range of supports to ensure language is not a barrier to women from CALD backgrounds seeking support:

- Translating and Interpreting Service (TIS National) is available 24/7 and is free of charge. 1800RESPECT can arrange for a translator on behalf of the caller.
- Callers can request for a female interpreter and the service is completely confidential.
- The 1800RESPECT website and DAISY application have been translated into 28 languages.

As part of the Third Action Plan, 1800RESPECT is exploring how technology can be harnessed to provide safe and relevant services for women with disability.

In September 2016, Women with Disabilities Australia (WWDA) publicly released a report entitled 'Improving Service Responses for Women with Disability Experiencing Violence: 1800RESPECT'. Medibank Health Solutions (MHS) commissioned the report and most of the recommendations have been addressed through:

- the introduction of the first response triage model for the telephone counselling component on 16 August 2016, as well as the relaunch of the online counselling service on 24 October 2016.

The 1800RESPECT website provides information about freely available tools that help make information on other websites more accessible for people with disabilities. The 1800RESPECT website has been designed to be accessible and user friendly for people with disabilities, for example if someone is blind or vision impaired, the text can be read using a screen reader.

The 1800RESPECT website also provides a guide to other services and information that is available to support the particular needs of different groups.

All aspects of the 1800RESPECT services are accessible by people who are deaf or have a hearing impairment. The Auslan video explains how to use the 1800RESPECT website. It also includes information about how to connect with the telephone counselling service and online chat. Details of the National Relay Service and instructions are provided on the front page of the website.

1800RESPECT recognises that providing the right support means understanding the causes and effects of violence in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities. The 1800RESPECT website provides information about understanding the experience of violence in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities as well as culturally appropriate responses to violence and safety planning with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples.

1800RESPECT hosted a webinar in December 2016 on improving cultural understanding in Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities.

Direct contact information for 1800RESPECT is promoted prominently on the first page of Our Watch (ourwatch.org.au). This site is also accessible for people with diverse needs such, including CALD, Indigenous and people with a disability.

The Stop it at the Start campaign website (www.respect.gov.au) includes contact details for 1800RESPECT, as well as other support services for diverse audiences including CALD, Indigenous and people with disability. The website has been designed to be accessible for a range of audiences.
