

Dir Sir or Madam,

I am a postgraduate student now studying at University of Sydney, major in Electronic Engineering! I learnt that the visa capping bill is now open for opinions. As an international student who adores this beautiful country, I really disagree with this "Visa Capping"!

Before I state my reasons, I would like to introduce myself first! Having studied at University of Sydney for one and a half year, I have gained outstanding academic records. Out of 8 courses last year, I got 5 High Distinction. I also won myself an internship at a big local technology company which runs a famous website. In addition, this semester I have successfully got the offer to continue the PhD study. Apart from my study life, I also work hard and just bought a car in May. Instead of translating a drive license from my home country, I choose to take the RTA test here, because I want to drive like a local driver. The reason that I mention my experience here aims at proving the fact most of international students are diligent and well educated. Having contributed so much to Australia society ranging from education, real-estate, sales and restaurants, they worth respects!

Australia is an great country! She attracts people because of her openness and fairness! Especially now when she is eagerly seeking for brilliant people to build and develop into a more competitive land, on a such a critical timing, I want to let you know that, it would be the loss of Australia if she rejects so many decent and respected people! As a consequence of above reasons, I do hope that Australia, the great country of freedom, can maintain her opened mind, and give a big hug to every person who love this spacious red land so much!

Sincerely
