

I find it appalling that the Federal Government took a "knee jerk" reaction to a television programme which exposed our Australian Government as well as Meat & Livestock Australia of complacency and inefficiency, as well as downright animal cruelty and neglect, to find now that there has been enough economic pressure to lift the live export ban and allow exactly the same scenario to continue.

What did the ban on live export achieve if we haven't achieved all abattoirs to be committed and regulated to use stunning before slaughter? It sounds like Joolia got it wrong and is trying to claw back votes, but she will find this will be her downfall.

This whole situation smacks of inefficient and tardy government, public servants and organisations such as Meat & Livestock Australia. You all have a lot to answer for to the Australian people.

Animal cruelty is as abhorrent as Hitler's extermination of the Jews.
