

To who it may concern,

I am one of the lucky people who have experienced the benefit of hyperbaric treatment.

I had a chronic wound for over 8 years that would not heal with conventional treatment. I am confined to a wheelchair and have spina bifida so I do not feel my legs and this ulcer, which was on my leg, was due to a surgery that became infected.

I do not have diabetes and if this funding is not available to people like me who's lack of circulation in her legs due to her disability. Causing me to not heal as rapidly as abled bodied people. I would no doubt have this wound for the rest of my life.

This wound has been very draining on me over the years, I have been on constant antibiotic, which are in quite high doses due to the severity, ongoing medical treatment all while trying to work full time to support myself.

I urge you to reconsider your decision of not opening this treatment up to the people who truly need it.

Kind Regards,
