

Dear Sir/Lady,

I am a boy from China was studying in Accounting now I have been working for two years as an accountant. The reason I chose Australia at the very beginning is the weather and beautiful beach and it is true when I first time arrived I found the sky was even clearer than the picture.

After I graduated I started working as an accountant and my girl friend married me. My current salary package is 50K per year but I believe this figure will increase as I am now studying hard towards CPA full member. My wife and I both like travelling, we think we will have a joyful life living in Australia. we planned to buy a house and prepared to have a baby. But without a permanent resident, we couldn't get home loan application granded so that our baby plan has to be postponed.

I understand that currently Australian Government and Immigration Department are both struggling in working out a proper Immigration Law to satisfy every one. I am not expecting too much but only one thing could some one take into consideration. I was using one year working experience to apply 885 VISA but becasue of the CSL's existing had pushed my application to the end of the queue that I have no idea when we can have our home settled on this land. In my opinion, practical experience is most important to an accountant rather than higher scor in language test or having professional training as exam does not equal to daily work and professional training does not equal to operational skill.

Currently we have so many uncertainties on whether we can stay or we have to leave. This is not good enough for my working and for those people like us who want to stay and contribute themself to this country. If some and say some words that those people who have high skill working experience should have priority in migration procedure and stop this endless waiting, then we can enjoy our life as other normal families.

Kind regards

Roy
