

I have a donor father and would one day hope to meet him, or at least have that as a possibility. I do not want any laws preventing me, or my twin sister, from doing this. I feel it is only fair that we have the chance to meet/contact our biological father and that he, in turn, has the opportunity to meet/contact us if that is what he wishes to do. It would be helpful and wonderful to have access to information about whether we have half-siblings out there. Not having this knowledge could lead to situation in the future that are better avoided, e.g. falling in love with an unknown relative. Also, knowledge of medical conditions in that family line could be vital for our future health. Thank you for taking time to hear my opinion.
