Joint Standing Committee on Treaties
Dear Sir,

Statute of International Criminal CodeSUBMISSION

My submission is:

Australia should not be party to the Statute of International Criminal Code.

Because:

1. It overrides Australian sovereignty:

Australia (government) rejected appeals to the Privy Council in order to end jurisdiction by "foreign" authorities. It is therefore hypocritical and a reversal of existing policy of independent sovereignty.

It is not in the best interests of the Australian people to transfer sovereignty to an alien foreign power.

The parliament does not have the peoples' authority for such a transfer of juridical sovereignty.

To transfer sovereignty to a foreign power could only be lawful following a referendum of the population.

2. Should Australia become a party to this Code:

It would place all Australians under the control of a foreign alien power without their individual knowledge or authority, and

It would place all Australians under an authority over which they could not possible have proper democratic influence, and

It would place all Australians under an authority that will be concerned more about the interests of more powerful nations than it would be about Australians, and Australians would have no reasonable or democratic control over future developments of the Code.

3. Should Australia become party to this Code:

all persons involved in the support of such involvement will have committed an act of treachery against the Australian people for which they will be held fully accountable.
