Dear Mr Thomson

Inquiry into competition in the banking and non-banking sectors

Mortgage brokers play a critical role in maintaining a competitive mortgage market because they subject every loan they originate with either a bank or non-bank lender to independent price scrutiny and comparison with competing products. This process continuously puts pressure on lenders to offer homebuyers competitive rates and loan features on new lending. It is therefore critical that the Federal Government's proposals to regulate the mortgage broking industry and consumer credit enhance and not undermine competition between broker services and both bank and non-bank lenders offering their own branded products direct to borrowers.

Borrowers from either bank or non-bank lenders will benefit from an efficient, competitively neutral mortgage broking regulation regime which provides them with appropriate consumer protection without adding unnecessary costs to brokers and, ultimately, to borrowers.

Loans originated directly by either a bank branch or a non-bank mortgage provider are not subjected to a process of independent comparison. In those circumstances the loans officer should be required to inform the loan applicant that they act for the lender and not the borrower, and are not able to provide independent advice about whether the loan is appropriate for the borrower relative to other available competing products.

Broking regulation is likely to require brokers to disclose the fees and commissions they receive for broking a loan. To maintain a fair and competitive market, bank and non-bank staff arranging loans direct with a borrower should be required to disclose any incentive based remuneration they will receive from selling a mortgage or other financial products related to the mortgage.

The States have agreed to transfer their powers to regulate mortgage broking to the Commonwealth. The Federal Government's Green Paper says work on developing these regulations will be assisted by a draft bill to regulate mortgage broking previously agreed by State Ministers for Consumer Affairs. Borrowing costs for homebuyers would increase as a result of three major defects in that draft State legislation. This is a major housing affordability issue as brokers have originated about 40% of the value of all current home loans.

The first defect is that brokers would be required to independently determine a borrower's capacity to make repayments. That function is properly the role of the lender. The US sub-prime crisis demonstrated the folly of lenders not being responsible for credit checks. Requiring brokers to duplicate credit checks would result in significant additional costs to homebuyers.

This has an anti-competitive dimension as it would, by definition, prohibit brokers arranging low doc loans. Under the draft legislation banks are exempt from this requirement, effectively granting them an exclusive right to offer this type of loan product. People who need low doc loans, like small business operators and families relying on part-time and casual employment, would be denied the services of a broker to help them choose the best loan amongst competing products. Instead, borrowers will only be able to deal with a bank selling their own products and not acting for the borrower as a broker does.

The second defect is the provision to give borrowers the right to seek a stay of enforcement of their mortgage against the lender if the borrower has a dispute with their broker. This interference with lenders' security will: increase the risk premium required by lenders resulting in higher interest rates; increase the premiums on Lenders Mortgage Insurance paid by first home buyers; and increase Professional Indemnity Insurance premiums paid by brokers thereby increasing the cost of broking services.

The third defect is the substantial increase in documentation that must be produced by a broker. This would provide little value to homebuyers but significantly add to their costs. It is important not to repeat the mistakes with Financial Services Regulation that added so much to costs that many people were priced out of the market for advice from financial planners.

Like most people who work in the mortgage broking industry, I believe that regulation is desirable to ensure high standards of service to borrowers and to provide a mechanism to remove from the industry any operator who is incompetent or dishonest.

An effective and efficient regulatory regime should require brokers to:

- be registered;
- have appropriate qualifications and experience, such as a Certificate IV in Financial Services (Finance/Mortgage Broking) or equivalent;
- enter a written contract to act on behalf of the borrower, specifying the type of loan sought and setting out the broker's remuneration;
- hold adequate professional indemnity insurance; and
- be a member of an external dispute resolution scheme to give borrowers access to an inexpensive and efficient mechanism for resolving complaints.

Mortgage lending is a highly competitive industry with many brokers operating across State boundaries. Even small regulatory differences between States interfere with the efficient delivery of mortgage finance and increase costs to borrowers. For this reason the regulation of mortgage broking should be a Federal Government responsibility.

It is critical that mortgage broking regulation not add unnecessarily to costs as that would reduce the competitiveness of lending arranged by brokers and allow the banks to increase their margins on direct lending.

In all this investigation, consideration and consultation the main emphasis has been in the home mortgage area. Another area that must be brought under this legislation is the in-store credit which is prone to non assessment lending by untrained and unqualified store personnel.

Yours faithfully

Rick Reeks
