

Let me begin by saying, I am not a racist. In fact I'm very happy about a diverse community of people coming to Australia, to become assimilate into our existing Australian 'culture', cause Australia is really and truly the best place in the world to live, that's why the people want to come here.

I believe it's really good when we welcome people from across the world and invite them to become Australians and while some of their ways will certainly permeate society, I want our culture, values and laws to stay basically Australian, underpinned by the Christian heritage and Christian values this nation was founded on and also has done very well on for a long time.

Yes, of course we can invite people to share the good parts of their particular ethnic culture with us so that we can learn how others live, but that does not mean we have to agree with their values or share their worldview so I believe the people who come should want to, and be willing to, fit into Australian's ways, and not try to change Australia's long standing successful Christian heritage to make it into the very culture they have moved away from.

If they want to change this nation to suit their values then that crosses the line and becomes unacceptable.

This is not a racist comment - it is a fact that all cultures are not equal as all nations' laws and values are not equally good.

Actually, now I'd like you to explain what is meant by, "the Government's social inclusion agenda"?

Is this different to assimilation?

Does this suggest that this inquiry is more about 'accommodating the needs of migrants', rather than requiring migrants to actually assimilate into our existing Australian 'culture'?
