

Submission no. 455

AUTHORISED: 20/6/07

To Whom it may concern,

I had a lot of trouble breastfeeding. My daughter had a lazy suck which was not diagnosed until she was 5 1/2 weeks old. I had a myriad of midwives in Burnside Hospital (Adelaide) and the Women's and Children's Hospital trying to help her latch on. I think this only added to the problem though, the lack of consistency. If I had been able to work through the problem with one midwife instead of a different one every feed things could have been different and her problem possibly diagnosed earlier.

Sonja Mercer