Roundtable on Impotence Treatments – Third Submission

We refer to our submission to you dated 3 September 2009 and to the submissions lodged by third parties.

We note that oral submissions were made by certain parties that AMI should use psychological counselling rather than pharmacological treatment to treat patients suffering from premature ejaculation.

Attached for your information is a copy of a GP summary guide issued by Andrology Australia and Monash University in 2007 which specifically states that the first line of treatment for all persons suffering primary premature ejaculation should be a pharmacological treatment. These written guidelines clearly contradict the oral submissions made by various parties on this issue.

Yours sincerely

Dr Jack Vaisman PhD Medical Science
