CANBERRA ACT 2600

AUSTRALIA.

Dear Sir or Madam,

A simple, brief and hopefully to the point illustration of the ongoing exploitation of the Australian consumer by the world's largest music retailer, Apple's "i-tunes"

I enclose examples of what would be described as a "back catalogue" item with a Nine (9) dollar difference in pricing, with the Australian dollar sitting at parity with the US dollar.

This is how it is with most music products. 1000's of pages of submission are not needed, just ask Apple to explain, justify this example.

I understand that if Apple set their price and people pay then the argument for it to stop seems weak but their pricing is immoral and exploitative. They know they are the market leader and use their market power to make excessive profits.

It seems that they have been guilty of this sort of behaviour in other countries and have been forced to change their pricing.

In America they were seen to be charging an unfair price for their sonically inferior product when compared with the CD and were forced to change their pricing.

They have been censured recently over their immoral advertising of products and "4G" compatibility

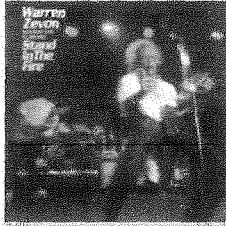

Hopefully something can be done to ensure that Australia is not just an easy target for huge corporations like Apple

Yours sincerely

PAUL BARKER

Album Review

After the release of Warren Zevon's fourth album, Bad Luck Streak in Dancing School, he was clean and sober for the first time years, and on-stage he was determined to make the most of his newfound strength and self-control. While his songs long had a dark and frantic undercurrent, Zevon was now capable of playing a no-holds-barred rock show where he could bring the sharper edges of his music to the forefront. Anyone who saw Zevon on what he called "The Dog Ate the Part We Didn't Like Tour" can attest to the fact he was in superb form, playing music that rocked hard while displaying intelligence, passion, and a sharply corrosive wit, and Stand in the Fire, recorded during a five-night stand at L.A.'s Roxy near the end of the tour, captures Zevon and his band at their peak. The musicians (anchored by flashy lead guitarist David Landau) pour out these tunes with plenty of fire, and the songs rock a lot harder than anything Zevon had summoned in the studio at that point. And the artist proved he was a superb rock & roll frontman on this tour, singing with mean-spirited glee (for a change, "Werewolves of London" and "I'll Sleep When I'm Dead" sound just as menacing as they were meant to be) and spewing hilarious bile at every turn (his ad-libbed "the Ayatollah has his problems, too" on "Mohammed's Radio" alone is worth the price of admission). The set list is dominated by Zevon's better-known tunes of the period, though there are two otherwise unrecorded originals (the OK title cut and the blazing "The Sin"), and a rave-up encore on "Bo Diddley's a Gunslinger" that revels in the joyous surrealism of the lyrics, and if one might have hoped for a more imaginative selection of material, these guys nail everything on deck. No one argues that Warren Zevon is a gifted singer and songwriter, but Stand in the Fire proves that, when he wants to, he can also rock with the best of 'em.

iTunes Review

Though in his later years Warren Zevon became best-known as a 'songwriter's songwriter,' this live album from 1980 recorded over five nights at the Roxy in Los Angeles proves he was once a 'rocker's rocker.' With guitarist David Landau and a seasoned-but-scrappy pick-up band from Colorado adding a terse edge, a newly-sober Zevon delivers powerful performances that range from the obvious ("Werewolves of London," "Excitable Boy") and the previously unreleased (the title track, "The Sin") to the most deserving ("Jeannie Needs a Shooter," "I'll Sleep When I'm Dead") and primal ("Bo Diddley's A Gunslinger / Bo Diddley"). Though Zevon's writing is notable for its economy, its magic is often contained in his emphatic delivery, which is given an added dimension when performed before an enthusiastic audience. (Here he namechecks James Taylor and Jackson Browne.) Since the one complaint of the original release was its brevity, the 2007 reissue nicely expands the show with four bonus cuts, including solo piano renditions of "Frank and Jesse James" and "Hasten Down the Wind" where Zevon sounds appropriately well-worn.

Live Classic
by Speezerino

When I get to the other side, maybe there's an option to bend the space/time continuum and experience first-hand some of the greatest live concerts ever recorded. I'd choose to be at Woodstock in '69 (especially the night Sly & Family Stone tore up "Higher"), in NYC @ Filmore East watching Duane go to town with his band from Macon, GA, ...More

Live Classic @ Its BEST!

Stand In The Fire disappeared before many us could get our hands on it. That was 1980. The 2007 remastered & extended version rights the wrong. In honor of Wareen Z, who once sang, I'll Sleep When I'm Dead / SITF zooms to the top of my greatest Live Rock Albums list! That's my Excitable Boy, Johnny Strikes Up the Band View Point! Biography

Born: January 24, 1947 in Chicago, IL
Genre: Rock
Years Active: '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s, '00s

One of the most acute and savagely satiric songwriters of his era, Warren Zevon was born in Chicago on January 24, 1947. His formative years were as colorful as the scenarios played out in his music: his father was a professional gambler, a lifestyle which forced the family to move frequently, and Zevon spent most of his formative years in California and Arizona. He learned to play piano, focusing primarily on classical material before a disintegrating home life led him into pop music, as well as...
