

Dear Sir

I feel a burden to write this email to you. I have migrated to Melbourne since 2000. I enjoy living here not only because of the 4 season weather in Melb but its Christian heritage. People here are more graceful than my people back home in Singapore.

Since migrating over here I have gradually assimilated the Australian culture. I have read a lot of problems arising because of multiculturalism policies endorsed by Western countries. Certain nationals will not assimilate themselves into the guest country they have migrated to. They persisted in sticking to their enclaves. We can allow people to come into Australia, but they have to adopt our culture and not we as Australians to adopt theirs.
