

To Whom It May Concern:

I would like to address the importance of school libraries. I have been developing a thesis towards my doctorate in information science. My research has centered on information literacy. I have found much of the research done in Australia and New Zealand, in regards to information literacy, to be the most comprehensive in the English speaking world. It is clear the librarians in your country are dedicated to teach information literacy skills to all students and should remain a focus in your schools. Without information literacy skills which are best taught by qualified librarians, Australian students would not be prepared as members of the 21st century work force and global community.

Regards,
Mary Jones
Head Librarian