Question No. 72

Senator Brandis asked the following question at the hearing on 24 May 2012:

Last year, Women With Disabilities Australia sent a formal communication dated June 22, 2011 to four of the United Nations Special Rapporteurs regarding the non-therapeutic, forced sterilisation of girls and women with disabilities in Australia. All complaints are documented in a report which goes to the United Nations Human Rights Council. The Special Rapporteurs also write to the country where the complaint originated from and they wrote to the Australian Government on July 18, 2011.

The Australian Government on 12 August and again on 30 September said it would respond after consideration of the complaints. It is now approximately 10 months since the Australian Government received correspondence on the forced sterilisation of girls. Would the department please look into why there has been such a lengthy delay in responding to the Special Rapporteurs' letter?

The answer to the honourable senator's question is as follows:

The Special Rapporteurs had initially requested a response within 60 days of their letter (sent 18 July 2011). Additional time was taken to allow consultation with the States and Territories and to allow a thorough response to be prepared. The Special Rapporteurs were notified of a revised response date and the Australian Government provided its response to the request on 16 December 2011.
