Question Number: W132-07

Question:

Senator Wong asked in writing:

In response to W714-06 you said that the 'final consumption expenditure - household' for March 1996 was 84.7. a) Is this statistic correct? b) Please table the page of the source document from which this number is taken, with the relevant statistic highlighted.

Answer:

(a) The 84.7 figure quoted as the implicit price deflator for final consumption expenditure - household for the March quarter 1996 was correct at the time the response was prepared.

However, the ABS data used in the Department's answer to W714-06 are seasonally adjusted and are subject to revision and/or seasonal re-analysis in subsequent quarters. Hence the revised calculations provided previously by the Department in its answer to W714-06 were only valid until the September quarter 2005 data were released.

As a consequence of the ongoing process of revision and/or seasonal re-analysis, the implicit price deflator for final consumption expenditure - household for the March quarter 1996 now stands at 85.3 (as at the March quarter 2006).

(b) Table 1 is an extract of the spreadsheet which contains the 84.7 figure quoted as the implicit price deflator for final consumption expenditure - household for the March quarter 1996. As explained above, these data are seasonally adjusted and subject to revision and/or seasonal re-analysis in subsequent quarters. Consequently, table 2 provides the corresponding data as at the March quarter 2006 (latest). The key figures in each table are highlighted. Please note that the final column in both tables presents the real wages calculation made by the Department.
