

I buy a lot of beauty products etc and would like to know whether palm oil is mandatory to be listed as an ingredient as a government regulation? If not I think it should be as it would certainly affect my decision in purchasing products in this billion dollar industry. It is mandatory to state whether or not a product is tested on animals, and considering that obtaining palm oil destroys habitat and ruins the environment that animals live in it should also be mandatory to list on products in Australia. I feel it is the duty of companies to inform customers exactly what they are purchasing so that a customer can make an informed choice about what exactly they are consuming and what kind of ethics they are supporting by making that consumption. I would not knowingly support a company who in my opinion is unethical by using palm oil to benefit their business so I should not have to unknowingly.

Regards

Adrienne Fleming