

To whom it may concern,

I am writing in support of my partner who is ten weeks pregnant, and has chosen to have a homebirth. We have conducted extensive research of all the birthing options available to us and have decided that a homebirth is for us. We have heard about the potential changes that may make it impossible for midwives to secure the necessary insurance to continue their valuable practice and are extremely concerned about this. It is essential that the government support couples in their choices during what is an incredibly vulnerable time for them rather than imposing legislation which will reduce their options.

regards,

Stephen Phillips