RE: Inquiry into the sexualisation of children in the contemporary media environment

DATE: 12 April 2008

In January 2008, Queensland Police charged a 29-year-old New Zealand man with using a carriage service to procure a child under 16 years of age. The child in question turned out to be an adult police officer.

It is hard to believe that this can be considered an offence while the daily activities of advertisers and print media conglomerates that 'groom' children – actual, real-life, vulnerable children, not adult police officers - for premature sex, is allowed to pass without comment.

1. Amendments to the AANA Advertiser Code of Ethics:

We call for amendments to the AANA Advertiser Code of Ethics (the code dealing with advertising generally) and the Advertising to Children Code to prohibit unhealthy sexualising content. The AANA Code of advertising to children has no section which deals with the sexualisation of children. The code dealing with general advertising has no acknowledgment that children and adolescents may be adversely affected by highly sexualised public advertising such as that appearing on billboards. (In contrast, the AANA takes the advertising of food and beverages to children very seriously).

The AANA needs to address:

- Sexually provocative or highly sexualised images of adults or adolescents in any context where such depictions may impact adversely on the psychological development of children and adolescents.
- Depictions that sexually objectify men or women, in locations or in ways that could adversely impact the healthy development of children and adolescents.
- Depictions of children as focused on bodily appearance or dress, or as sexually aware or engaging in sexual behaviours.

2. More Government involvement in regulation:

The current self regulatory scheme has failed to maintain adequate advertising standards. Self regulatory structures and responses have not properly acknowledged the rights of parents and guardians to manage or limit children's exposure to harmful media and advertising messages and images.

The Advertising Standards Board was set up by industry to police itself. It purports to reflect community standards. Yet it does not consult child development experts about the potential impact of advertisements on children before they are released for public viewing. The ASB does not vet advertisements before they are released publicly - it only gets involved when there is a complaint. Even when complaints are made they are often dismissed, without a response based on objective opinion from health professionals in the field of child development. The ASB cannot impose fines, so advertisers can breach the rules with short advertising campaigns, stop them if ASB finds against them, and face no penalty.

- Government intervention is needed to ensure that industry practices that are harmful to child and adolescent development are prohibited. A new model is needed which upholds social responsibility to children and the community as being the central consideration in the use of public space and airwaves. Input and participation of relevant industry groups must be balanced by input and participation by the public, especially parents and guardians and child and adolescent development experts as well as government. Public accountability and social responsibility need to be guiding principals in advertising, media and marketing standards and regulation.
- Child and adolescent development experts should be represented on the Advertising Standards Board.

3. Overseeing of children's interests in marketing, media and advertising:

WFA supports the establishment of a Federal Children's Commissioner with the power to

- ban sexualised marketing practices and products that do not respect children's developmental needs.
- educate industry and the public about the dangers of sexualising marketing practices on children and adolescents.

4. Reform of complaints processes to achieve more accessibility and accountability:

Complaints mechanisms are unwieldy and difficult to understand and access by ordinary members of the public. A range of bodies are responsible for handling complaints about advertising, media and marketing. Each body is currently accessed through different complaints making and complaints hearing processes and accountability mechanisms are inconsistent. It takes much too long to get a determination.

WFA calls for implementation of a centralised administration to administer and channel complaints, creating a one-stop complaints point for the general public. Complaints would be received by complaints process experts who would direct the various complaints to the relevant responsible bodies. Principles of an effective, accountable and accessible complaints process would include:

- monthly turnaround times with requirements that responsible bodies respond within this monthly time frame with meaningful and accountable response processes.
- requirements for wider industry codes of conduct that would prohibit marketing practices that can harm children and adolescents through premature sexualisation, with requirements as above. Such codes should require responsible commercial behaviour, including in products and services marketing, music, entertainment marketing and broadcasting, that respects the developmental needs of children and youth and that also allows parents and guardians the reasonable capacity to limit or avoid exposure to products, messages or images judged developmentally inappropriate or harmful.

Yours sincerely,
Dr Philippa Martyr
