

I think that all sexualisation of children is not only wrong but outrageous. Parents are the only ones with any rights in this area and they should be supported in terms of the children being protected from any sexualisation.

The innocence of children is sacred and should be preserved at all costs. Jesus had very harsh things to say about anyone who corrupted children. I suggest that politicians take that on board ASAP.

The government should protect the family from any noxious influences including television, internet, mobile phone images and so on. No sexual images should reach any children as far as is possible. Parents should decide when children learn anything about sexual matters.

Greg Byrne