

To Whom it may concern

I am writing to beg you to maintain the rebate...the means test should not be in place.

When we need as many people to change to renewable energy, it makes no sense to make political decisions such as the means test. I live on Flinders Island where fuel and gas and electricity costs are some of the highest in Australia. WE have good weather, though very cold at present and an abundance of wind. The Diesel powered electricity generator chugs away all day/night....convenient but expensive. Perhaps the rebate should be extended to windmills as well as solar panels so we could put more energy back into the grid . With all the clamour about climate change, greenhouse gases, fuel price rises...sharing the burden....the rebate should be bigger and there should be no means test. There has to be some substance to the rhetoric.

Yours faithfully,
John O'Dell
