

Dear Simon

I am a small business owner specialising in solar installation in the Northern Territory. I believe that the means testing of the rebate will stifle an industry still in its infancy and with a huge impact to have on the future of our world as we know it. The industry needs the chance to expand and invest in research and development to fully succeed in providing an alternative power source for the future of our country. We as Australians have had some of the greatest breakthroughs in science that the world has seen, without an industry which can strongly back this we may fall behind in this technology and loose out on not only scientific advances that would benefit us but also the world. The government needs to back this industry as much as possible to ensure it can achieve these goals.

Kindest Regards
Rede Ogden
