Our world desperately needs to go solar and the people have embraced this decision with no doubts, why doesn't our Government?

We dont need any further delays and uncertainty, what will this do to our solar business and for the homeowner's important and valuable decision to go solar.

Leave the politics out of this, the world needs a Government that will lead and make these future proof decisions to become more sustainable for its people and its environment now before its far too late. Isn't that what 'making changes for the better' and 'planning ahead' is all about ?

With the bigger picture in mind, we need to look after mother nature, so she can in return look after us for future generations, because havent we already done enough damage to our environment and its inhabitants.

It may not be our generations fault, but it is our generation now that needs to make this decision to amend the 'wrong' thats been done and start with a strong leading example of the direction we will inevitably need to choose.
