

The call for a Plebiscite or series thereof to gauge the level of support for a republic is a complete waste of time and taxpayers money. The Referendum in 1999 has provided the answer to the promoters of a republic. Until a documented replacement for our Constitution is available for public scrutiny this issue is not worth any more time, effort or cost to the taxpayers of Australia. Regardless of the reasons the (so called ) pro-republicans keep “dreaming” up to brainwash the citizens of our Country about the faults of our current Constitutional Monarchy and the role of the Crown, I can assure you, my family, friends and workmates are not stupid enough to pledge any support for an invisible possible erosion of their lifestyles and those of future generations.

I have spent a working lifetime providing the public / my clients with tons of documentation explaining everything from A-Z about their contractual risks, to comply with our Financial and Consumer laws prior to making a personal financial commitment in case they don't understand what they are doing. I am staggered to be presented with circumstances whereby an elected Senator (s) who is responsible to fully inform taxpayers all the possible outcomes of their decisions on an issue as important as constitutional change, is prepared to only provide “waffle” with smoke and mirrors.

For Senator Brown and his Commrades to even contemplate their costly changes will be accepted without close scrutiny to identify the nasties that will be thrust upon the people they represent is a clear measure of their incompetence. They should all get on with representing their electorates and finding solutions to the plethora of more important issues confronting the nation perpetually. If it is not possible for them to carry out their duties in terms of our current Constitution they should simply all resign and allow somebody who has the skills and “will” to do so.
