Jakarta

A terror web site gives instructions on how to shoot foreigners or throw grenades at motorists stuck in traffic in Jakarta.

The web site, which police said they would close, is called Anshar El Muslimin (www.anshar.net), contains diagrams of several locations and why they would be ideal for attacking people and how to escape.

Police called the web site a "work of terror" and said it had been set up by one of three men named suspects this week over the October 1 restaurant suicide bombings on Bali that killed 20 victims, including four Australians, as well as three bombers.

Islamic militants linked to al-Qaeda and Jemaah Islamiyah have carried out a number of car bombings against Western targets in Indonesia in recent years.

But there have been no shootings of foreigners on the streets, a practice seen in parts of the Middle East.

Police spokesman on Bali Antonius Reniban said a militant he identified as Abdul Aziz, one of three named suspects over the latest Bali attacks, had confessed to designing the web site, which would soon be shut down. "This is a work of terror," Mr Reniban said.

A lawyer for Aziz said his client had been approached several months ago by several people, including Malaysia's Noordin Top, a senior figure in Jemaah Islamiyah.

"Several people came to him and asked him to create that web site. One of them was Noordin M Top," lawyer Muhammad Rifan said.

"But he only received material supplied by others. A webmaster is not responsible for the content of the website. He is not part of their group."

Mr Rifan said that Aziz had no link to the Bali attacks.

One diagram on the web site showed a computerised schematic of central Jakarta, where it said foreigners liked to walk from an office and hotel area to a popular shopping mall. It showed a blue section that it said was the place to attack foreigners.

Another showed how foreigners could be shot when they used overhead pedestrian bridges to Jakarta's busy roads.

It gave specific examples of places in Jakarta where traffic banked, saying this was ideal to shoot motorists or throw grenades or bombs at targets. "Grenades can be used to make sure the injured are dead, God willing. Grenades can be normal grenades or fire bombs that the car burns," it said.
