

The Evidence Amendment Bill 2008

I am writing to express my concern regarding the Evidence Amendment Bill 2008

If we are going to pass this bill, then we may as well pass one that protects anyone from giving evidence against anyone else.

To my mind we are making a farce of what we are alleged to stand for, and that is a country that is answerable to God as a Christian country.

If we are prepared to keep loosening the laws to allow people in casual (and most de factor relationships end up being casual as do so many same sex relationships), then we are completely abandoning our legal system to more and more corruption by people who 'say' they are in relationships.

The law courts are so caught up and backlogged with things that are morally important, why cause more chaos with allowing those who are not willing to commit themselves to one another in a permanent godly relationship (which they step into and out of frequently) to be protected by a law that they can choose to use as they please.

I am greatly concerned that those who are engaged in illegal activity in the first place will use this amended law to their advantage thus laughing in the face of all that we are supposed to stand for.

I am writing this letter because I feel it is time we who are a majority had a say instead of sitting back and letting the vocal minority have their way.

If you want this sort of bill passed and feel that it would be carried by the general public, then have a referendum. You have them over other things that you feel we should know, so why not have one on the things that are more important to a society that seeks to live by the laws of the land now.

Yours respectfully

Mrs. Valda Collison
