

I am currently in a two and a half year same sex relationship with another male whom I love very much. I am now at a point in my life where I have never been happier and at a place where before I met        I never thought I would be. Although marriage may not be something that we are currently desperate to do we feel we should have the right to be able to do this just as my siblings have and my partner's brother is about to. We are in love as much as any of these couples and should be afforded the same rights. By allowing us as a same sex couple to marry you would be allowing two people that are in love to commit to each other for the rest of their lives. It is hard to understand why anyone would not want to allow anybody this right.
