

Hi,

I guess I really don't know how this works, but here goes. I want to make it clear that I protest the current laws that discriminate against same sex marriage. Apparently, I can pay taxes, I am no longer entitled to a benefit from Centrelink as a sole parent and I must say, my current partner is a better parent than the other people I have lived with that were of the opposite gender. The only thing different about our relationship compared to opposite gender couples is that the government won't let me marry my partner because of her gender. It's a bit confusing actually, because I am sure that I once heard that discrimination against someone because of gender was against the law???
