

I write from Tasmania in regards to something that is not in my environs but is important to the future generations of people, the ecosystem that supports the remaining wildlife and the existence of something precious that we as white people are close to destroying. There is an absolute crisis in water and i do not have to be a politician or a scientist to know we are running out of time for the Coorong and the Lower lakes,act now and be counted to be proactive. We are not short of clever people with ideas that could avert this disaster, begin to seriously employ and fund their knowledge, yours sincerely, Janie Wilson.
