

Dear Sir,

I would like to request that consideration is given to allowing trained and well behaved dogs (and other animals) to travel in public transport. I totally agree that large aggressive dogs may be a problems and the bus driver would need to have the ability to remove such a dog at the next stop.

Recently I took my small, well behaved poodle/cavalier king Charles on a long walk, I underestimated the effects of the heat and found myself in a position where I couldn't get home. It seems even a taxi can't take animals. It would have been so easy to get on a bus, sit with the dog at my feet where he would hardly be noticed.

Please can you look at ways of making it easy to travel with a dog? I would find it really upsetting to be faced with a fine or court action to merely get home. I am a 65 year old woman who tries to stay fit as well as use public transport.

Please let me know if you would help work towards this end?

Kind regards,
Jannette Wells
